>What actually happened next was this. When the Giant had got Sophie outside, he arranged the blanket so that he could grasp all the four corners of it at once in one of his huge hands, with Sophie imprisoned inside. In the other hand he se ized the suitcase and the long trumpet thing and off he ran.

Sophie, by squirming around inside the blanket, managed to push the top of her h ead out through a little gap just below the Giant's hand. She stared around her.

She saw the village houses rushing by on both sides. The Giant was sprinting dow n the High Street. He was running so fast his black cloak was streaming out behi nd him like the wings of a bird. Each stride he took was as long as a tennis cou rt. Out of the village he ran, and soon they were racing across the moonlit fiel ds. The hedges dividing the fields were no problem to the Giant. He simply strod e over them. A wide river appeared in his path. He crossed it in one flying stri de.

Sophie crouched in the blanket, peering out. She was being bumped against the Gi ant's leg like a sack of potatoes. Over the fields and hedges and rivers they we nt, and after a while a frightening thought came into Sophie's head. The Giant i s running fast, she told herself, because he is hungry and he wants to get home as quickly as possible, and then he'll have me for breakfast.                  5
